

JUNIOR GOLD

Investing in the mining giants of tomorrow

Update June 2014

Fund objective

To provide long-term capital growth from a globally diversified portfolio investing primarily in small to medium capitalization companies specializing in identifying, developing and extracting gold. It may also invest in mining companies extracting other precious metals. There may be occasions, in light of adverse market conditions, when the Investment Manager chooses to hold high levels of cash, bonds and government securities. The Investment Manager may use derivatives for efficient portfolio management purposes only.

Macro-economic positioning

- Current macro-economic conditions make gold an attractive alternative store of value
- Government money-printing could stimulate inflation against which gold is considered a hedge
- Very strong investment demand for gold ETFs and gold coins
- Gold mining equities can offer better returns than gold bullion
- Smaller companies tend to outperform their larger counterparts

Risk Considerations: Past performance is not necessarily a guide to future performance. The value of your investment can go down as well as up. The fund invests in smaller companies which may carry a higher degree of risk than larger companies. The shares of smaller companies may be less liquid and more volatile over shorter term periods. Changes in exchange rates between currencies may cause the value of investments to diminish or increase. The fund focuses on a specific sector and has a concentrated portfolio which can lead to greater volatility.

Junior Gold update 10 July 2014

Dear Investor,

The gold price appears to have found firm support at $1,200/oz for over a year now. It has developed a technical price pattern over this period that could indicate a strong rise over the next six months. The level of $1,200/oz is very important for many smaller gold miners. It is generally the base price forecast adopted for medium term operations, driving resource definition, mining plans, and financing decisions. Certain operations can withstand significantly lower prices for short periods of time, but the longer term future of the industry is based on higher prices.

It is generally accepted that Exchange Traded Funds (ETFs) tracking the price of gold have been the preferred way for smaller investors to take a position in portfolios. Last year saw gold ETF holdings drop by over 33%, driving an even larger decline in the gold price. According to the World Gold Council, physical demand for bullion bars in Asia rose significantly, especially in the second half of the year, in part counterbalancing the effect of ETF sales. This year, gold has been generally agnostic to significant geo-political events like the Russia-Ukraine conflict and increasing unrest in the Middle-East. Investors have also continued placing a lot of faith in the ability of central bankers to maintain financial stability programmes and support modest growth in the economy. Any event indicating that continued printing of money cannot support stock-market valuations indefinitely given lack of stronger economic growth, is likely to cause a general fall in share prices and renewed interest in gold as a safe-haven. A return of generalist investors into gold ETFs could have a disproportionate effect on the price of gold, especially given the shrinkage in new production and the transfer of bullion to firm, longer-term holders.

Junior Gold has performed well in the year to date, recovering some of the value lost last year. It has been particularly volatile as most of its portfolio companies are sensitive to the important floor of $1,200/oz. Should the gold price rise significantly above this level, the operational gearing of our portfolio holdings is expected to result in further material re-rating, as was evidenced in the first quarter of this year. Our emphasis in monitoring the progress of our holdings is on prudential management of production, tight cost control and reduced spending on marginal exploration activities. We believe that such positioning will not only ensure corporate viability in a low price environment, but will also support rapid expansion of profitability should gold resume its longer-term rise.
