Commentary

September 2025 Investment Summary

A positive month for the Active range with returns ranging from +0.86% for Active 1 to +1.95% for Active 5.

*P Acc share class with data sourced from FE analytics as at 30 September 2025.

September 2025 was a positive month for both markets and the portfolios, in absolute terms.

Most major equity markets saw gains, with fears of a recessionary trade war continuing to fade, lower US interest rate expectations and moderating inflation. Emerging market equities extended gains seen throughout the year, supported by solid performance in Latin America and China versus weakness in India. Japanese stock performance was strong as it continued to benefit from the weaker yen and robust earnings reports. The FTSE 100 returned +1.8%, reaching new record highs and was helped by a surge in share prices for pharmaceutical heavyweights AstraZeneca and GSK. The Stoxx 600 gained almost +1.5%, posting its best September since 2019, despite lacklustre returns from German equities and political instability in France. Top contributors to total returns were Basic Materials and Energy. The S&P 500 increased +3.5% and Nasdaq climbed +5.6%, bolstered by the ongoing AI surge. At a sector level, Technology, Communications and Utilities were the primary contributors, while Materials were a drag.

From a trade tariffs perspective, Mexico implemented a new 50% tariff on Chinese cars under pressure from the US. Trump also announced a 100% tariff on branded pharmaceutical products along with levies on heavy trucks, kitchen cabinets and bathroom vanities.

The Federal Reserve cut interest rates for the first time this year in September, and their updated summary of economic projections were more dovish than anticipated, projecting an additional 0.5% of cuts this year. Fed chair Jay Powell signalled further moves were far from a done deal, saying if central bankers “ease too aggressively” they “could leave the inflation job unfinished and need to reverse course”. Markets have priced in a 100% probability of an October cut and an 88% chance of another in December. Investors continued to interpret strong data such as the Q2 GDP revision to 3.8% (the fastest growth rate in nearly two years) and below consensus jobless claims as a headwind for further Fed easing, reinforcing the “good news is bad news” narrative.

Growth forecasts have been revised for different regions in September, reflecting the divergence of economic fortunes. Some economies, like India, were expected to maintain strong momentum, while highly-trade exposed economies like Germany and several in East Asia faced downward revisions. Markets appeared to shrug off negative economic headlines, such as government shutdowns, disappointing jobs data and weak manufacturing figures. This has led to discussions about the potential ‘decoupling’ of financial market performance from underlying economic conditions, especially in the US.
