Commentary

The market suffered a much higher degree of volatility during the month as US inflation stoked fears of higher interest rates, and led to a bout of profit taking. The fall in the price of oil saw related sectors hit particularly badly. The fund underperformed its sector average* as a number of key holdings were indiscriminately sold off regardless of their fundamentals. Norwegian stocks were hit as 'hot money' flew out short term. We expect the market will recover fairly quickly repeating the scenario of the March/April period of volatility. We do not believe anything fundamental has changed and valuations remain attractive. The fund has taken advantage of buying those stocks which were sold off and have already bounce upwards. We continue to focus on company fundamentals, which are excellent within the portfolio.*Source: Lipper, bid to bid, net income reinvested to 31/10/05
