Fund manager's report

Asian stocks maintained their positive momentum in February. Growing hopes that China and the US could strike a trade deal, after President Donald Trump delayed a planned tariff hike, boosted markets. The Federal Reserve's (Fed) continued dovish tilt also lifted sentiment. But geopolitical tensions, particularly between India and Pakistan, came to the fore at the month's end, and capped gains.

Trade optimism, along with a surprise surge in credit growth in January, buoyed Chinese equities. Yum China's earnings were aided by encouraging results from its KFC business. Hence, we took advantage of relative strength to pare our position in the fast-food chain operator. Hong Kong markets also rose, led by insurers and diversified-financial companies. Notably, AIA was bolstered by fresh approvals to begin operations in three more mainland cities. During the month, we also met with AIA's chief risk officer and discussed the insurer's efforts to mitigate key risks.

On the policy front, central banks in Australia, Indonesia and Korea left benchmark rates unchanged, while India's central bank lowered its key rate. While slower rate increases may dampen the banking sector's interest income-led growth, we are confident of our holdings' long-term potential. In related portfolio activity, we reduced our exposure to OCBC on a tempering of expectations for growth in the coming year. While it continues to be a strong franchise, we believe that the smaller position better reflects this nearer-term outlook.

In February, we also built on positions in several companies that suffered temporary share-price declines, which we felt belied their solid long-term fundamentals. For example, Cochlear, a global leader in hearing implants, corrected as short-term competitive dynamics manifested more than the market expected. While we continue to monitor developments on the competitive front, we believe the company's commitment to investing in areas like technology and product innovation will give it a sustainable advantage over the longer term, instead of chasing nearer-term market share. Elsewhere, we capitalised on weakness in India to Hero Motocorp as we think it could benefit from pre-election pump priming.

Against this, we took profits from Siam Cement, which benefited from expectations of higher chemical spreads in a weaker oil-price environment. We also pared our exposure to Swire Pacific. We also exited Korean internet company Naver, due to its tougher outlook.
