The Company may, but is under no obligation to, repurchase Shares and investors should expect that the primary means of disposing of Shares will be by sales on the secondary market. The price at which a shareholder may dispose of Shares will depend on the prevailing secondary market price, which may, or may not, reflect the prevailing net asset value per Share. Typically, at any given time on any given day, the price you pay for a Share will be higher than the price at which you could sell it.

product/Shares which are not redeemable and the Company is under no obligation to repurchase these from investors. In addition, there are potential liquidity limitations on the ability of shareholders to buy and sell the Company's Shares in the AIM market. There is, therefore, no certainty that the market price of its Shares will fully reflect the underlying Net Asset Value ("NAV") of the Company and nor should shareholders rely upon any share buyback policy to offer any certainty of selling their Shares at prices that reflect their underlying NAV.
